

Last night after you hung up I wrote you a poem hoping it might change your heart. This morning I tell myself: Get serious, man.

Someone once compared writing a poem and hoping it will change the world to dropping rose petals down a deep well, waiting for the splash.